Introduction

Are "traditional" households dead?

Today, only one-fourth of households are composed of married couples with own children under 18, compared with 40 percent in 1970. Over the past 25 years, the number of households consisting of single-parent families and people living alone have increased substantially.

Over the past several decades, the composition of households has changed significantly due to changes in the age structure of the population and changes in social values. This report provides national demographic data on households and families, based on the March 1995 Current Population Survey.

The largest decline in the proportion of households composed of married couples occurred between 1970 and 1980. Similarly, one-person households increased most rapidly during the same decade.

A "household" is a person or group of people who occupy a housing unit. The "householder" is the person in whose name the housing unit is owned or rented.

A "family" is a group of two or more people (one of whom is the householder) living together, who are related by birth, marriage, or adoption.

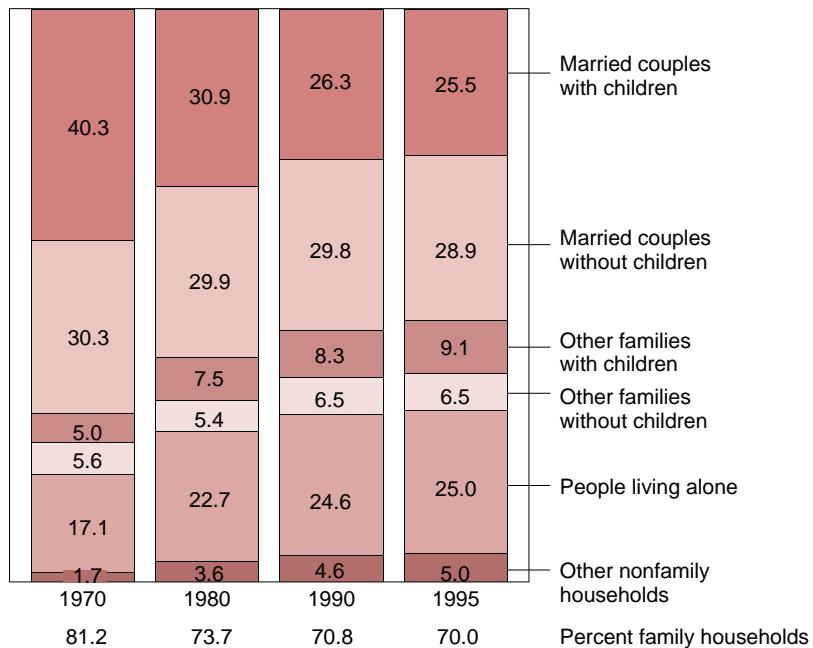

"Own children" under 18 are never-married sons and daughters of the householder, including step- and adopted children.

A "nonfamily household" consists of a person living alone or a householder who shares the home with nonrelatives only, for example, boarders or roommates.

Then and in 1970	Now in 1995
1) Married couples with children made up 40 percent of households.	1) Married couples with children make up 25 percent of households.
2) There were 3.14 people per household.	2) There are 2.65 people per household.
3) One out of every five households had five or more people.	3) Only one out of every ten households has five or more people.
4) People living alone made up one-sixth of the households.	4) People living alone make up one-fourth of the households.
5) 5.6 million families were maintained by women with no husband present.	5) 12.2 million families are maintained by women with no husband present.
6) 1.2 million families were maintained by men with no wife present.	6) 3.2 million families are maintained by men with no wife present.
7) Two out of three households were in metropolitan areas.	7) Four out of five households are in metropolitan areas.
8) 44 percent of families had no own children under 18 at home.	8) 51 percent of families have no own children under 18 at home.

Number and Composition of Households

In 1995, the number of U.S. households reached nearly 99 million¹, up from 93.3 million in 1990. The rate of growth in the number of households has slowed during the past 25 years. Between 1970 and 1980 the number of households increased by an average of 1.7 million per year. During the 1980s, growth slowed to 1.3 million per year, and thus far in the 1990s, has not changed significantly, remaining at 1.1 million per year.

Growth in the number of households depends on population growth, changes in the age composition of the population, and decisions that individuals make about their living arrangements. Changes in the median age at first marriage, divorce rates, and the condition of the economy are among other factors that can have a positive or negative effect on the number of households. Factors such as these also influence the composition of households.

Types of households. U.S. households encompass a wide variety of living arrangements. The two major types are "family households" and "nonfamily households."

Families are further categorized into those maintained by a married couple, and "other families" maintained by men or women with no spouse at home. These other families may include one-parent families with children, sisters sharing a home, or any combination of relatives, but no spouse of the householder. Non-family households include people living alone and householders living only with nonrelatives, for example, boarders or roommates. In this report, we will focus our attention on family households.

Traditionally, families have accounted for a large majority of all households. As recently as 1940, nine out of ten households were families. As figure 1 indicates, by 1970 this proportion had fallen to 81 percent, and during the 1970s it fell another 7 percentage points to 74 percent in 1980. Thereafter, the family household category began to stabilize, declining only 4 percentage points to 70 percent of all households in 1995. Table A shows that, of the 99.0 million households in 1995, 69.3 million were family households and 29.7 million were nonfamily households.

In 1995, five-sixths of these non-family households were people living alone. There was a striking difference between female and male nonfamily householders. Women, who made up three-fifths of the nonfamily householders, often were elderly. Nearly half of these women were 65 or older and 44 percent were widows. In contrast, nearly three-fourths of the male nonfamily householders were aged 25 to 64, and half had never married.

Size of households. In 1995, the average number of people per household was 2.65, down from 3.14 in 1970. Between 1970 and 1990, the share of households with five or more people decreased from 21 percent to 10 percent (see figure 2). During the same period, the share of households with only one or two people increased from 46 to 57 percent. Since 1990, the size distribution of households has remained unchanged.

Only 35 percent of all households contain "own" (birth, adopted, or step-) children of the householder. By definition, nonfamily households contain no own children, although they may include other people under 18 who are not relatives of the householder. Presence of own children in married-couple and other family households is discussed in the next section of this report.

Location of households. The geographical distribution of U.S. households has shifted away from the "rust belt" toward the "sun belt" during the past 25 years. In 1970, 52 percent of all households were in the Northeast and Midwest and 48 percent were in the South and West. In 1995, these percentages were 44 and 56, respectively.

Households also have become more urbanized during this period. The share of households in metropolitan areas increased from 69 percent in 1970 to 79 percent in 1995.

Characteristics of Families

In 1995, 78 percent of the 69.3 million American families were maintained by married couples. The remaining 22 percent were maintained by women or men with no spouse present. Nearly four-fifths of the latter group were maintained by women.

The number of families maintained by people with no spouse present is increasing rapidly. Since 1970, the number of female-householder families has increased by 122 percent (from 5.5 million to 12.2 million). The number of male-householder families grew by 163 percent (from 1.2 million to 3.2 million). In contrast, married-couple families grew only 20 percent (from 44.7 million to 53.9 million).

Considerable attention is paid to the problems of one-parent families. They are much more likely to be poor than are married couples with children. Less notice is given to the situation of families with no spouse present and married-couple families without own children at home.

More than half of families had no own children under 18 at home.

In 1995, 51 percent of all families contained no own children under 18 — 7 percentage points more than in 1970, when only 44 percent of families had no own children under 18 at home.

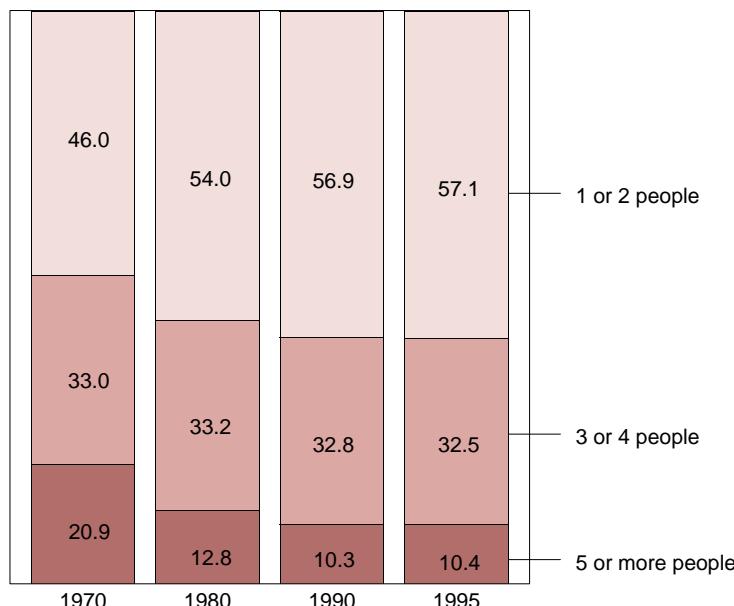

Families without own children under 18 at home are not necessarily "childless." Some contain other related children, for example, children of an adult sibling, or grandchildren. They also may include unrelated foster children. Other families include adult children who are still living at home. Still other families have adult children who are living away from home.

The last case is largely made up of families which are at the "empty nest" stage in their life cycle. In 1995, 81 percent of married couples with a householder 45 years old or older had no own children under 18 at home, compared with 68 percent in 1970.

More younger families are without own children under 18 now than in 1970. Among married-couple families with a householder under age 35, 29 percent had no own children under 18 in 1995, compared with 23 percent in 1970. An increase in the proportion of families without own children is what one would expect in a population which is delaying child-bearing.

In 1970, 28 percent of the householders in married-couple families were younger than 35; of these, 77 percent had own children under 18. Fewer married-couple householders were in these prime child-bearing ages in 1995. Only 22 percent were under 35; and, of these, only 70 percent had own children under 18. This reflects aging of the population, as well as delayed marriage and child-bearing.

A substantial number of other families also are without own children under 18. They are families consisting of a woman or man, without a spouse or own children present, maintaining a household with one or more other family members present. In 1995, more than a third of female-householder and more than half of male-householder families were without own children under 18.

The number of married-couple families with children was not significantly different between 1995 (25.2 million) and 1970 (25.5 million), in spite of a 20 percent growth in the total number of married-couple families during the period. In contrast, the number of mothers living with their children and the number of fathers living with their children (but without spouses at home) did increase: the former grew by 160 percent (from 2.9 million to 7.6 million), while the latter grew by 317 percent (from 0.3 million to 1.4 million).

Nearly 22 million adult sons and daughters were living with one or both parents. In 1995, of the 21.7 million own children 18 or older living in their family of origin, 14.2 million lived with both parents, 6.2

million with their mother only, and 1.3 million with their father only.

More than 60 percent of the stay-at-home adult children were in the 18-to-24 age group, many of whom were living in college dormitories. These adult children who were away at college were counted at their parental residences for the purposes of this survey.

Most families were small. The average number of people in a family was 3.19 in 1995, down from 3.58 in 1970. Only two persons were present in 42 percent of all families. Fully 40 percent of married-couple families consisted of the husband and wife alone.

Married-couple families were larger, on average, than families whose householder had no spouse present. In 1995, the average size of married-couple families was 3.25 people, compared with averages of 3.05 for female-householder, no spouse present, and 2.84 for male-householder, no spouse present, families.

Families with a White householder were smaller than those with Black or Hispanic² householders: 2.59 people for Whites, 2.85 for Blacks, and 3.52 for Hispanics. White married-couple families had an average size of 3.20, Black married-couple families 3.61, and Hispanic married-couple families had an average of 4.08 people. Female-householder families, with no spouse present, followed a similar pattern: for Whites 2.87, for Blacks 3.42, and for Hispanics 3.55 people.

Families with no spouse present had younger householders than married-couple families. The median age of female householders, with no spouse present, was 40.4, not significantly different from 40.7 years for male householders, with no spouse present, but more than 5 years younger than the median age of householders in married-couple families, 45.9 years. Among those with no spouse present, 27 percent of the female, and 37 percent of the male, householders had never married.

About half of Black mother-child families had a never-married mother. In 1995, 51 percent of Black female householders with own children under 18 and no spouse present had never been married. Comparable proportions were 35 percent for Hispanics and 23 percent for Whites.

Many of the mothers who have never married by the birth of one or more of their children may marry later. This possibly follows from comparing the percent of never married mothers of younger children compared with those of older children. Among mothers with own children under 6 only, 78 percent of Blacks, 65 percent of Hispanics, and 55 percent of Whites had never married. Percentages of never-married mothers with own children 6 to 17 only were 40 percent of Blacks, 21 percent of Hispanics, and 12 percent of Whites. But these percentages could be explained by a trend over time away from marriage, as well as by marriages after women had their first children.

Number and Characteristics of Family Groups With Own Children Under 18

Family groups with own children under 18 include all one- and two-parent living arrangements with children. They include those maintaining their own home (families) and those living in a home maintained by another relative (related subfamilies) or a nonrelative (unrelated subfamilies).

In 1995, 69 percent of the family groups contained a mother and a father. Of the remainder, 85 percent were mother-child family groups. There were 9.8 million such mother-child family groups. Of these, 77 percent were mother-child families, 17 percent were related subfamilies, and 6 percent were unrelated subfamilies.

Mothers in related subfamilies were younger and more likely to never have married than those in mother-child families. This situation corresponds to a child who continues to live with her parents after having a child of her own. Later, she may move out and set up her own household, either as a mother-child or as a married-couple family. Other types of mother-child subfamilies also occur. One-third of these mothers were married with absent spouses (due to marital separation or some other reason) or were divorced. Also, more than one-third were 30 years of age or older.

Unrelated subfamilies consisting of a mother and her children also encompass a variety of living arrangements. The mother might be the unmarried partner, roommate, boarder, or live-in employee of the householder. More than half of these mothers were divorced. Their median age (32.0 years) was less than that of mothers maintaining their own families (40.4 years).

Like mothers in related subfamilies, some of the mothers in unrelated subfamilies may establish their own family households later.

Two-parent family groups with own children were almost all married-couple families (25.2 million of 25.6 million). The small number of other two-parent family groups were almost all related subfamilies. Often they were three generation, child-parent-grandparent households.

In the type of three-generation household just described, the parent-children subfamily is usually dependent on the grandparent primary family as indicated by the fact that the grandparent is the householder. This situation may occur when economic hardship does not allow the middle generation to maintain a separate household for themselves and their children.

Another type of three-generation household has one or more grandparents or other elderly relatives dependent on the primary family of parents and their children. The popular image is of "sandwich" families, with both dependent children and dependent elders at home. This type of living arrangement is relatively uncommon.

In 1995, only about 600 thousand families had both children under 18 and other members 65 and older living together. Moreover, not all of the elders necessarily were economically dependent. Some of those 65 and older were the parents of the children under 18.

How have the relative numbers of different types of family groups with own children under 18 changed over time? In 1970, there were 29.6 million family groups, compared with 37.2 million in 1995. Of these, the proportion that contained both a mother and a father dropped from 87 percent in 1970 to 69 percent in 1995.

The number of family groups with children headed by women with no spouse present increased from 3.4 million in 1970 to 9.8 million in 1995. Of these, the proportion of subfamilies increased from 16 percent in 1970 to 23 percent in 1995. The number of men living with their children but with no spouse present grew from 0.4 million to 1.7 million between 1970 and 1995.

Labor Force Status of Married-Couple Families

The living conditions of married-couple families usually depend on the participation of husband and wife in the labor force. If both spouses work, they may be able to afford a better house and other amenities. On the other hand, in married-couple families with children, employment of both parents may pose child care problems.

In 1995, both husband and wife were in the labor force in 30.0 million of the 53.9 million married-couple families. In 27.6 million of the married-couples, both spouses were employed; the rest had at least one unemployed spouse. In 61 percent of the "working-age" married-couple families (ones with householders under 65), both spouses were employed.

Employment rates differed between married couples with and without own children under 18. In 62 percent of married-couple families with children, both parents were employed, compared with 42 percent among those with no children under 18. This lower employment rate is to be expected since at least one spouse in many of the couples with no children under 18 at home was retired.

In married-couple families with own children under 18, 91 percent of the fathers and 67 percent of the mothers were employed. When couples had children under 6 at home, 92 percent of the husbands and 60 percent of the wives were employed.

Source of Data

Most estimates in this report come from data obtained in March 1995 from the Current Population Survey (CPS). Some estimates are based on data obtained from the CPS in earlier years and from decennial censuses. The Bureau of the Census conducts the CPS every month, although this report uses only data from the March survey.

Accuracy of the Estimates

All statistics are subject to sampling error, as well as nonsampling error such as survey design flaws, respondent classification and reporting errors, data processing mistakes, and undercoverage. The Census Bureau has taken steps to minimize errors in the form of quality control and edit procedures to reduce errors made by respondents, coders, and interviewers. Ratio estimation to independent age-race-sex-Hispanic population controls partially corrects for bias attributable to survey undercoverage. However, biases exist in the estimates when missed persons have characteristics different from those of interviewed persons in the same age-race-sex-Hispanic group.

Analytical statements in this report have been tested and meet statistical standards. However, because of methodological differences, use caution when comparing these data with data from other sources. Contact Andy Zbikowski, Demographic Statistical Methods Division, at 301-457-4220 or on the Internet at azbikows@census.gov for information on the source of the data, the accuracy of the estimates, the use of standard errors, and the computation of standard errors.

More Information

A detailed package of tables with characteristics of households and families by metropolitan/nonmetropolitan residence, region, tenure of housing unit, and other variables is available on paper (PPL-46) for $36, from the Population Division's Statistical Information Office (301-457-2422). Detailed tables and some time series data also are available on the Internet (<http://www.census.gov>); look for households and families.
