The American Indian Population: 2000
Percent of Population for One or More Races

This table shows the differences between the population by race in 1990 and the population by race in 2000. Persons may report more than one race in 1990 and 2000. Differences in the percentage of the total population of the United States for Census 2000 and Census 1990 are not similar to the changes produced by reclassification or by changes in the definition of race. The difference in population for a race between 1990 and 2000 using race alone in 2000 (column 5) and the difference in population between 1990 and 2000 using race alone or in combination in 2000 (column 6) provide a "percentage-enumerator" ratio to the change in population of that race between 1990 and 2000.

Issued September 2001

2000 Census.
This table shows the differences between the populations by race in 1990 and the population by race in 2000. Individuals could report only one race in 1990 and could report one or more races in 2000. As a result, race data for 1990 and 2000 are not directly comparable. The data are for the United States population on April 1, 2000, and are 20.1 million. Of the total, 4.1 million people, or 1.9 percent, reported as American Indians and Alaska Natives.

The difference in population for a race between 1990 and 2000 using race alone is included in column 12 (change in population for one race in 1990 and 2000 using race alone). The difference in population for a race between 1990 and 2000 using race in combination in column 12 (change in population for one race in 1990 and 2000 using race combined with one or more other races). The data are for the United States population on April 1, 2000. This table includes people who reported one or more races, including American Indian and Alaska Native, in addition to 1.6 million people, or 0.9 percent, who reported only American Indian and Alaska Native as well as one or more other races. Census 2000 asked separate questions on race and Hispanic or Latino origin. Hispanics who reported their race as American Indian and Alaska Native, alone or in combination with one or more other races, are included in the numbers for American Indians and Alaska Natives.

The term "American Indian and Alaska Native" refers to people having origins in any of the original peoples of North and South America, and who maintain tribal affiliation or community attachment. It includes people who reported "American Indian and Alaska Native" as part of their principal or tribal tribe.
